ALEXANDRIA, July 19, 1879. Dear Dispatch : It was with heavy hearts that on Wednesday last your tramps left the old town of Fredericksburg. With heavy hearts, did I say? Rather with no hearts at all—we had left them there. We have never (hush, now, I won't back down from that) had more kindness and hospitality shown us in the same space of time, we have never been more feasted and toasted, and, above all, we have never seen so many lovely and interesting girls in the course-What werthe above symptoms are found to exist not of this tramp only, but of all our earthly pilgrimage. It was harder to leave when the time came than if we had kept straight on through without ever tasting the joys that were so soon snatched from our lips. But go we did. Passing up the Rappahannock, and noting, as in the James at Richmond, the sudden change of the stream from a deep, quiet artery of commerce below to a rapid, noisy water-power above, we came to the extensive Ficklen mills, and crossed the bridge to Falmouth. Barely pausing here, we climbed up the steep hill, took one farewell look at Fredericksburg, and then pursued our journey. We only went a few miles that day, stopping at the house of a gentleman who gave us some information rather damaging to the readjusters. He himself was as completely ruined by the war as any one I ever heard of. Returning to his home, after the war, that he had left beautiful and luxurious, he found part of the house thrown down and the rest nothing but bare bricks and bare fields. Starting in a log cabin, and keeping out of debt, he has gradually worked up, till be lives now in a comfortable and pretty cotbeen for a few demagogues. The head and front of them pays $2.55 texes! The party is composed almost entirely of men who have forcibly readjusted their own debts and of ignorant men who have been mis-They have actually been persuaded that by the McCulloch bill the State is paying the former six per cent, and three per cent. besides, making a total of nine per cent, on the entire debt! Thursday morning we left here and continued our course through Stafford. We passed through the site of the old town of Aquia. Nothing is left now to mark the spot except four old stone chimneys, one of them completely covered with beautiful vines-a beautiful allegory of Paul's sublime sentiment, "This mortal shall put on immortality." We stopped for an hour or so at the house of Hon. George Moncure, whom we were fortunate enough to find at home on a visit. When we got to the Chopawansic we found not even a log to cross on. Taking off our shoes we forded the creck, and after a short and pleasant voyage we landed on the inhospitable shores of Prince William. I call them inbospitable because there was no suitable place on the bank to sit down and put on our shoes. We got them on, though, and proceeded along a very desolate road through the woods to Dumfries. It was so little travelled that we would have thought we were in the wrong road but for our faithful guide, the telegraph. We did not see a human being from the time we entered the county till we got to the old town. "The shades of night were falling fast " when we entered the o'd cemetery at Dumfries-for here we had concluded to spend the night. We had lunch with us, and so we ate our supper on a granite-topped table a hundred and forty years old. We sat awhile among the old tombs, and one began to repeat Gray's Elegy. As we went on our surroundings seemed to give it a new and deeper meaning than it had ever had to us before. We then sought Downieville who has taken the trouble a suitable place to spend the night. Selecting the best place we could find, we stuffed our satchels with leaves and composed ourselves for the night. My companion soon fell asleep, but I was not so fortunate. The ground was very hard, and we had drunk a great deal of cold tea during the day. And so I lay there with one hand on my companion in the healthy sleep of vigorous manhood, and the other on the tomb of one who had slept the sleep of death for the better part of two centuries. Not a trace of name or date remained to rescue him from oblivion. Never were surroundings more peaceful. The stars ing on the edge of this wall, rising to this shone with unusual lustre. Right overhead was Vega, the Sirius of the North; Altair and Arcturus vied with each other in brightness; Cygnus, Scropio, Ursus Major, and Cassandra bespangled the blue canopy with diamonds brighther than those of earth, while over all and through all the Galaxy stretched its broad, white arms. With these surroundings my thoughts re-verted to the old colonial days, when those presence of mind alone saved him. The around me gazed at these same stars, and man instantly jumped into the box, and worked and wept and loved and prayed. I thus descended with lightning velocity to thought of one on whose tomb the single the earth beneath, the box when it touched word "yoyage" could be deciphered, and the ground rebounding with great force. I hoped it had landed him in the haven of The effect was tremendous, jarring the man rest. With these and other thoughts I was severely, but, singular to say, not doing him occupied; but was I to be left to these any serious injury. But what an escape! peaceful meditations? No. I shiver when I think of that experience. Weird, uncanny music filled the air. Dim, shadowy figures, with long skeleton limbs, flitted through the air, and my soul sunk within me, for I knew they had us. "They? What, you don't mean gho-?' Oh, no! Mosquitoes. I drew on my gloves, wrapped my head and wrists in handkerchiefs, till I looked like a ghost myself. But it was no go. It had been too long since they had had a chance at a good live corpse, and they were not to be baffled. Presently Alter, thoroughly aroused, proLOCAL MATTERS.

respectively, we got a great deal of infor-mation. He remembers when Aquia and Dumfries were seaports—the latter place having 1,500 inhabitants, sending out cargoes of flour, tobacco, and lumber. In his poyhood there was a shippard on the Neabsco, a mile below his house, from which a schooner carrying 2,500 barrels of flour was launched. But now the inlets have all filled up and these places are four and five miles rom the river. Mr. Kankey showed us one of John Brown's tomahawks-a most barbarous weapon-and three cavalry pistols of the Revolutionary, 1812, and late wars, respectively. When we asked the old genlleman for his reckoning, he told us an anecdote of an Indian, who, having recovered lost child for a white man, was asked what he charged. Said he, "Stranger, give me gone. Naught but the friendship of the heart can repay deeds of kindness and love." From here we came to the thriving little own of Occoquan, at the head of navigation of the river of the same name. It has nice stores, a large mill, and does a large business in exporting firewood. We crossed on the pretty iron bridge, which brought us into Fairfax county. Here there are a great many settlers from New Jersey who seem to be doing well. There is an air of thrift about their places which, I ton worshipped, we diverged from the di-dignity of pilgrims. We got there about 5 o'clock, and were politely shown over the place by Mr. Peters. We had no tears to shed over the tomb, but we laid an extra five miles on the altar of our country. There is a great deal more of interest there than we had any idea of, but we will not dwell on that. We set out for our ninemiles' walk at ten minutes before 6. This was our champion walk. Having walked twenty-three miles already, we made that last nine miles in two bours and ten minutes. None but those who have worked of the view that met us as we came in sight of Washington. The broad river with steamers gliding up and down, the circle of wooded bills, the spires of the three cities, and the great white dome, all were hallowed by the soft, purple light of the sinking sun. That sun on rising found us mong the tombs af Dumfries, and setting left us nearing the town of Alexandria.

An Italian's Lucky Drink.

[Nevada City (Cal.) Transcript.] Four years ago two young Italians left Naples for California, hoping to better their fortunes. They arrived within the Golden Gate with just enough money to convey them to the mines in the interior. They were advised to go to Downieville and seek work in the Sierra Butts mine, where a large force was wanted. On their journey one fell sick by the wayside and was taken in by a kind-hearted farmer.
